Request:

Please provide an explanation of how Narragansett Electric calculates its Provision for uncollectible accounts.

Response:

Narragansett Electric follows a modified Black Motor Method (the "Method") to calculate its provision for uncollectible accounts (the "Provision"). Narragansett Electric calculates the required balance of the reserve for uncollectible accounts by multiplying a Black Motor moving average percentage (the "BMP") by a forecasted fiscal year-end accounts receivable balance.

The BMP is calculated by dividing the average of six years of accounts receivable charge-offs by the average of six years of ending balances of accounts receivables.

At the start of the fiscal year, Narragansett Electric employs actual charge-offs and accounts receivable data for the previous five fiscal years and forecasts data for charge-offs and accounts receivable for the current fiscal year.

Throughout the fiscal year, Narragansett Electric updates forecast data for the fiscal year with actual results and recalculates the BMP. The BMP and the Provision are recalculated on a monthly basis.

Division 7-7-GAS

Request:

Please provide an explanation of how Narragansett Gas calculates its Provision for uncollectible accounts.

Response:

Narragansett Gas calculates its provision for uncollectible accounts (the "Provision") by, first, determining a bad debt reserve estimated percentage (the "Bad Debt Reserve"). The Bad Debt Reserve is applied to Narragansett Gas's ending accounts receivable balance, whereupon additional steps are taken. These steps are described more fully below. The Provision is calculated monthly by General Accounting, which also conducts a monthly reserve analysis.

The Bad Debt Reserve is calculated by dividing fiscal year accounts receivable write-offs to 12 months billed revenue (on a six-month lag) and multiplying it by a discretionary 20 percent contingency reserve multiplier factored into the historic write-off rates due to deteriorating economic conditions.

The Bad Debt Reserve is applied to forecast fiscal year billed sales, which are actualized monthly, to determine the year-end reserve requirement. An additional reserve of 80 percent for all accounts receivable aged greater than 360 days is added to the Provision. An additional specific exposure contingency adjustment is added to the reserve for high risk accounts identified. Each month, the reserve balance is reduced by the actual net write-off and increased by the Provision. Forecast revisions to revenue and/or write-offs will determine the appropriate Provision rate to be used in the following month.

Narragansett Gas conducts a mid-year review of the estimate by reviewing the fiscal year-to-date actual results to determine if there needs to be a mid-year adjustment to the Bad Debt Reserve.
